

Can pansies survive snow?

Can pansies survive snow? Hello plant lovers it is me again, welcome to another topic about pansies.

Today in this topic we are going to answer the question which is “Can pansies survive snow?”

Well pansies are often among the first harbingers of spring. They are widely available as bedding plants and look charming tucked into mixed flower beds or placed in mixed or individual pots.

As we know pansies are cold tolerant, however they will not they will not survive severe weather.

Classification

Pansies are tender perennials in mild climates.

Department of agriculture plant hardiness zones pansies six through ten, which in these climates plants are planted in the fall.

They bloom from winter to spring before succumbing to the summer heat.

In cooler climates, zones 6-7, the plants are grown as hardy annuals.

Although they tolerate some cold they might and probably not survive severe conditions.

Temperatures

You might have seen Pansies blooming through snow, and they can withstand fairly cold weather.

They can handle a light frost which is 28 to 32 degrees Fahrenheit, really well, they may even survive a hard freeze but the chances are very low.

Pansies can survive short periods of 20 Fahrenheit climate but they will probably suffer frost damage.

David Goforth of the North Carolina cooperative extension says pansies can survive up to 8 hours at 10 Fahrenheit and longer periods of cold weather will kill them.

Protection

Pansies response well to a light mulch. Shredded pine needles, wood chips or even weed-free straw keeps them warm and helps them survive cold weather.

You can also through sheets, plastic clothes or agricultural fabric over the plants.

Potted pansies are the easiest to deal with, simple move the pots indoors or into a protected garage during severe weather.

Recommendations

In mild climates, you can easily plant pansies in the fall to bloom throughout the winter, and if a cold snap threatens, they can be protected with mulch or a fabric covering.

For northern gardeners, though, growing pansies is more complicated. If you plant them in the fall, mulch them well, they will then bloom earlier in the spring, if they survive, then they would with spring planting. The problem Is that they might not survive.

Refrence:

<https://apartmentflowers.com/can-pansies-survive-snow/>